5 FITNESS TRENDS TO REV UP YOUR NEW YEAR'S RESOLUTION

By Gwendolyn Purdom | REDEYE

In the ever-evolving world of fitness, the latest trends can sometimes be tougher to keep up with than last week's Flywheel class. But as a new year warms up, local pros say there's plenty to look forward to at the gym in 2015. RedEye spoke with Chicago trainers, instructors and execs to get all the sweaty details.

Shorter classes

Busy gymgoers looking to squeeze in a quick core class on their lunch break are finally getting that chance, gym staffers said. At Fitness Formula Clubs' Union Station location, regional group fitness instructor Lois Miller said the 30-minute classes she and her team have been adding to the schedule have been extremely popular with the work crowd and she predicts more compact offerings around town in the months to come.

"People are starting to see shorter classes on the schedule and their reaction isn't, 'No, that's not an hour, so it's obviously not a good

—Jeana Anderson, a fitness instructor and writer for fitness blog A Sweat Life workout," said Jeana Anderson, a fitness instructor and writer for fitness blog A Sweat Life. "People are starting to understand that a shorter workout can be just as beneficial."

Tracking

For the Fitbit generation, keeping tabs on all aspects of health is a must, and gym managers are taking that mindset and running—and cycling and circuit training—with it. Tracking technology is central to the concept at Third Degree Fitness, which is set to open in River North in the first quarter of 2015, owner Allison Silver said. The three-level facility will be the second in the country—the other is in New York—to incorporate interactive Peloton cycles into its spin classes, allowing users to create personal accounts, measure progress, access on-demand classes and compete live with both classmates and Peloton riders in the New York studio and on at-home machines around the world. Silver said Third Degree also plans to eventually use MyZone—a wearable monitor that tracks vitals such as heart rate and uploads it to an online log—for interval training and heated power yoga classes. At spinning studio Flywheel, the signature software called TorqBoard collects metrics with the goal of motivating riders with live leader board.

Boutique-style classes on demand

With its Chicago launch in September, mix-and-match class membership program ClassPass is solidifying—and simplifying—a growing preference for on-demand style variety in workouts. "A few people have tried it before, but we're seeing multi-city, multi-gym memberships like ClassPass emerge in Chicago that are giving people that ... many studio experience [with one membership] that so many people are craving," Anderson said.

For $99 a month in ClassPass' case, users can access unlimited classes at 111 studios around the city. "[Fitness enthusiasts will] discover all sorts of workouts that they never tried or imagined existed," ClassPass co-founder and CEO Payal Kadakia said in an email to RedEye. The format is picking up speed in big cities nationwide, experts said; here in Chicago, established gyms are following the newcomers' lead through partnerships like West Loop gym CrossTown Fitness' joining forces with nearby studio Bare Feet Power Yoga and climbing gym Brooklyn Boulders or Enrgi Fitness' teaming up with Yoga Loft to offer members boutique variety within their existing memberships.

All about athletics

While once-hot classes such as Zumba and Turbo Kick are losing scheduling space, more athletics-focused workouts are taking their place, Enrgi Fitness' Amy Leffel said. Leffel's gym recently tested an obstacle course-style class inspired by NBC's "American Ninja Warrior" and received positive feedback from participants.

"People are starting to understand that you can do athletic things, for example, with a female body and it doesn't make you bulky," Anderson, who also teaches at Enrgi, said. "So I think people are more open to high-intensity interval training, more open to weight lifting formats, more open to circuit training, which I think was very much popularized by places like Shred415, but it's just being accepted more as that's the way we train now. We're athletes now."

Friendlier fitness

In addition to their tracking capabilities, the 50 Peloton bikes at Third Degree Fitness also will allow for video chatting—just one way local studios will be making their workouts a more social experience. "If you're taking a class in Chicago and let's say you have a sister in California and you're both on your Peloton bikes? You can connect with the person, you can actually chat with them," Silver said.

Offline, programs such as Anderson's #Sweatworking events—monthly after-work group workouts and socializing at different studios around town that she launched last spring—focus on creating a sense of community. "A lot of the [other] options for after-work networking or even just after-work hanging out were at a bar or at a restaurant," Anderson said. "I wanted to give people a healthy option."

With Tom Skilling, the weather isn't frightful

Mike
Maxwell

» redeye@

» @themike
maxwell

There's a noticeable void in our city's leadership these days. It's reached the point where I'm tired of reaching for a pouting quarterback or the porcelain point guard as our figure-head. We need to recognize that the leader who calls the shots, affects our everyday lives and can give us hope at a moment's notice does so every night on the ol' Channel 9. There's no one in Chicago today with more clout than Tom Skilling.

The winter's first decent snowfall has hit, and Chicago's annual revelation has begun: "Wait, it snows in the Midwest?!" During the next week, as snow plows remind us of where we stand in the neighborhood pecking order, every local weather team will be working the green screen to prove they're the trusted source for what really brings us together: griping about the weather.

Working for another network—slinging the weather in Skilling's shadow—must be draining. Skilling is the man, and he does his job with double-dipped substance over style, along with a dose of relative accuracy. Most other channels in Chicago push some of the most toned lady triceps to sashay a cold front through the Great Plains. WGN lets Skilling talk to us like we're all in a second year of a meteorology curriculum with a calming tone commonly reserved for some loose-cannon kid's grocery store meltdown.

The same way our baseball teams have to bow to decades of history over hope every spring, the local weather teams yield the ratings and fanfare to Skilling. You don't see ABC's Jerry Taft having the stones to try and sell his own Snuggie, do you? NBC's Brant Miller, ABC's Tracy Butler or whomever my parents watch on CBS clearly know they're in the presence of greatness. Why else would they all be so inclined to end 90 percent of their forecasts with nervous chuckles and empty banter with the anchors?

There are delightful moments where Skilling tests us to make sure we're really listening. I'm pretty sure he was on the verge of saying "meow" during his forecast the other night, but he opted for a timely Seth Rogen/James Franco reference and warned us about "The Pineapple Express." Sadly, he was a few years behind on that quip.

The way we reserve the term "local celebrity" for our news anchors is something I cherish. Tom Skilling is not a local celebrity. He's part oracle, part mythical being, delivering some of the bleakest of weather news with more charm and finesse than Doug Ross could while pulling a double shift at County General on "ER." The White Sox even showboat him out for a "Weather Day" as a pregame special.

“WGN lets Skilling talk to us like we're all in a second year of a meteorology curriculum with a calming tone commonly reserved for some loose-cannon kid's grocery store meltdown.”

I can only imagine what it'd be like to meet Skilling in person. The skeptic in me thinks it'd be as traumatizing as meeting a mall Santa without his trademark fluffy white beard. But hopefully he'd resemble a bald, slightly more jovial Ned Flanders. It's only a matter of time before he starts his forecast with a "Hi-diddly-ho, Micah and Mark!"

I want to thank Tom Skilling and his Italian beef-filled belly for turning to the side every night to hide the fact that Kankakee exists on a map of Illinois, and giving the forecast to me straight—and with style. Strumming my morning commute with his radar. Echoing my frustrations with his words. Skilling me softly.

CTA riders huddle under heat lamps as the wind whips across the elevated Roosevelt Station. MICHAEL TERCHA/TRIBUNE

Do CTA heat lamps warm riders?

Chicago Tribune

It's a familiar winter scene: CTA train commuters, already braving cold and wind just to make it to their station, huddle beneath the orange-ish glow heat lamps as they await their train.

But do those lamps actually make frosty riders any warmer?

Each overhead fixture has infrared lamps that reach a surface temperature of around 400 degrees Fahrenheit.

Experts say the warming effect on humans is not an illusion, like the idea that drinking alcohol makes you feel toasty. The infrared light, though not as luminous as an incandescent bulb at home, still creates loads of energy that can warm a commuter—just not how you might have expected.

"Our skin tissue is primarily water," said Brian Cannon, assistant professor of physics at Loyola University Chicago. "Water molecules on our skin are able to absorb that light, which makes them move faster. That increased motion is what heat is."

Such technology is particularly efficient because it doesn't rely on the air—with its below-zero wind chills this week—to transfer the heat from source to shivering human. The process is similar to how the body soaks up radiant energy from the sun and feels warmer as a result, according to the European Union's public health website.

The lamps should heat skin and bring up the body's core temperature a bit, Cannon said, but they might be hindered by riders' thick coats, sweaters and scarves.

"[The heat lamp] is not good at penetrating clothing," Cannon said. "We've got so many layers of clothes on to trap the heat so it's really only warming those parts of the body that are exposed."

The CTA has had heat lamps for more than three decades, according to spokeswoman Tammy Chase. Installed at the above-ground stations and a few bus terminals, the lamps are switched on in mid-October and deactivated around March 31, Chase said.

Bitter cold temperatures not expected to let up until weekend

By Megan Crepeau | REDEYE

Be sure to bundle up Thursday: It's going to be practically Arctic.

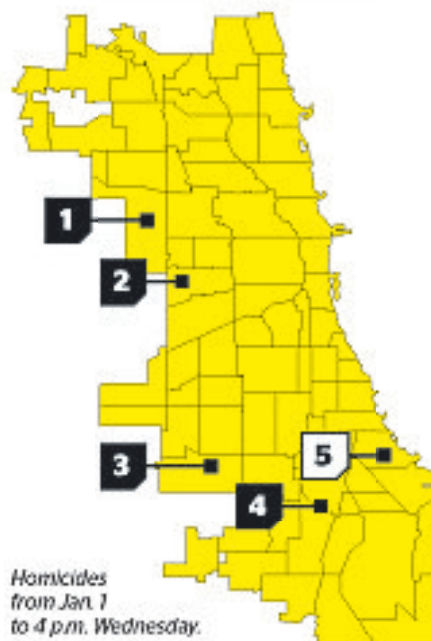

Thursday morning lows in the Chicago area will be anywhere from 5 to 12 degrees below zero, according to Amy Seeley, a meteorologist with the National Weather Service. Wind chills could reach as low as -30 degrees. And though it likely will warm up a bit in the afternoon, the wind chill still could be in the negatives.

Chicago Public Schools canceled classes for the second day in a row Thursday, which could go on the books as Chicago's coldest Jan. 8 ever. The record cold for that date was set in 1942, when the temperature fell to -11 degrees, according to the National Weather Service.

The worst will be over after Friday, Seeley said. "Friday we'll still be in the single digits, Saturday will be in the teens and Sunday in the upper 20s," she said. "So there's a warming trend going into the weekend." MCREPEAU@TRIBUNE.COM | @CREPEAU

Single homicide Double homicide

HOMICIDE TRACKER

By Tracy Swartz | REDEYE

Six homicides have been reported in Chicago in January, with the South Shore community area recording the city's first double homicide of the year, a RedEye analysis of preliminary police data found.

Two men, ages 18 and 19, were shot to death Tuesday in the 7800 block of South Luella Avenue in South Shore, according to officials.

South Shore, which counted 52,000 residents in the 2010 Census, has two reported homicides so far this year, the highest homicide toll of Chicago's 77 community areas, according to RedEye data.

South Shore recorded 16 homicides last year, down from 31 killings in 2013, a RedEye analysis found.

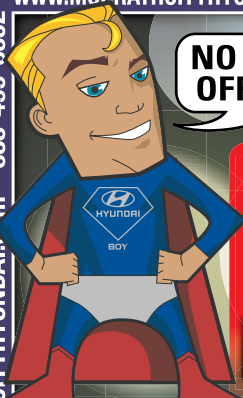

Citywide, gunshot homicides were logged in Austin, North Lawndale and Roseland, according to RedEye data.

Hunt continues for 2 in Paris attack; 1 surrenders

One man sought in a deadly Paris shooting Wednesday has turned himself in, and police hunted Thursday for two armed men with possible links to al-Qaida in the killing of 12 people at satirical newspaper Charlie Hebdo that caricatured the Prophet Muhammad.

Two officials identified the suspects as French brothers Said and Cherif Kouachi, 32 and 34, respectively, and 18-year-old Hamyd Mourad. The French website Le Point said the brothers had been pegged from an identity card left in their abandoned getaway car. The website said Mourad had served as the getaway driver, though later news reports cast doubt on whether he'd played a role in the shootings.

Cherif Kouachi was convicted in 2008 of terrorism charges for helping funnel fighters to Iraq's anti-U.S. insurgency and was sentenced to 18 months in prison.

According to Le Point, authorities had tracked the assailants to Reims, a city about 80 miles northeast of Paris. Authorities reportedly conducted a search there, the result of which was unclear.

The Agence France-Presse news agency reported early Thursday that the driver had voluntarily turned himself into police in the city of Charleville-Mezieres, about 50 miles northeast of Reims. A French judicial official, speaking on condition of anonymity, also said the man surrendered voluntarily.

There was no word on the whereabouts of the Kouachi brothers.

The masked, black-clad men with assault rifles stormed the offices near Paris' Bastille monument in the Wednesday noontime attack on the publication, which had long drawn condemnation and threats—it was firebombed in 2011—for its depictions of Islam, although it also satirized other religions and political figures.

Shouting "Allahu akbar!" as they fired, the men used fluent, unaccented French as they called out the names of specific employees.

Artist Corinne Rey told the French newspaper L'Humanite that she punched in the security code to the Charlie Hebdo offices after she and her young daughter were "brutally threatened" by the gunmen.

Eight journalists, two police officers, a maintenance worker and a visitor were killed, prosecutor Francois Molins said. He said 11 people were wounded—four of them seriously.

After fleeing, the attackers collided with another vehicle, then carjacked a car before disappearing in broad daylight, Molins said.

President Francois Hollande, visiting the scene of France's deadliest such attack in more than half a century, called the assault "an act of exceptional barbarism."

France raised its terror alert system to the maximum and bolstered security with more than 800 extra soldiers to guard media offices, places of worship, transport and other sensitive areas. Fears had been running high in France and elsewhere in Europe that jihadis returning from conflicts in Syria and Iraq would stage attacks at home.

QUICK START

"The Quick Start is a manual option that I suggest for someone who is intimidated by cardio equipment," said Carsten Beckmann, a personal trainer and founder of FitPro West, Inc. In Quick Start mode, the equipment starts at a slow, standard speed until you're ready to adjust the settings for a preferred pace of walking, jogging or running. "Instead of continuously pushing the up arrow button to increase speed or incline, save time and stay focused by punching in the desired the number you want and hitting enter," Beckmann said.

DASHBOARD CONFESSIONAL

DON'T KNOW HOW TO USE THAT TREADMILL? TIME TO CLEAR UP THE CARDIO MACHINE CONFUSION

By Tony Peregrin | FOR REDEYE

For workout newbies, the glowing green and red digital displays of a treadmill or elliptical machine can be as overwhelming as an airplane instrument panel. No matter what model of machine you step onto at your local gym, the console will provide basic functionality such as manual or preset workout selections, and speed and incline controls that help users shed pounds, get toned and improve cardiovascular capacity. TONY PEREGRIN IS A REDEYE SPECIAL CONTRIBUTOR. @TONYGRIN

HANDLES

Once you find a comfortable pace, let go. "You should be able to tolerate the speed and the incline without holding onto the hand rails or the dashboard," Beckmann said. "People who are holding on are either leaning forward or leaning to the side, and that increases the risk of muscle strain and is bad for the back. It is a better work out when you are not holding onto something because then you are working out your core, your back and your abs to continually stabilize yourself," Beckmann added.

INCLINE

Increasing incline (and resistance for ellipticals) ups your cardiovascular efficiency and muscular endurance. "Most people don't bother to add an incline, but when you're running outside, you are using extra force to push forward, and you're not doing that on a treadmill, so you're not using as much energy," said Mitchell Policky, a strength trainer and co-owner of RPM Sports Performance. "Put the machine on some sort of incline to ensure you are replicating the experience of walking or running outside."

SPEED

After five minutes of warm-up at a reduced speed, increase the speed—which will vary depending on your fitness goals—and begin the workout. Treadmills provide readings of miles per hour and minutes per mile, while ellipticals often include revolutions per minute, or RPMs. "In terms of setting your speed, a common rule of thumb to keep in mind is if you are having a hard time talking then you might be going too fast," Beckmann said. "You should always be in control of your breathing."

CALORIE DISPLAY

The calorie display—perhaps the most confounding exhibit on the dashboard—is based on time, speed and body weight, and is more of an estimate rather than a 100-percent accurate reading, according to Beckmann and Policky. "Don't get fixated on the numbers," Policky said. "If your goal is to lose weight, use one of the predetermined programs [that] will challenge you in ways you normally wouldn't, particularly when it comes to interval training," Policky said.

"Work out two to three times a week for a month on treadmill or elliptical and you'll see improvement," Beckmann said. "Typically people look at how their clothes are fitting, but it's the changes inside the body—increased heart rate and improved blood pressure—where you'll find the more measurable results—at least in the beginning."

1	The Bears will succeed in their general manager search if they ...	... take lessons from other, better organizations. AKA most teams in the league.	... check their LinkedIn account. I hear it's a good networking source.	... hire one BEFORE they hire their next head coach.	Don't know, don't care. The Bears are dead to me!	... leave Jay Cutler out of it.
2	Sammy Sosa remains on the Hall of Fame ballot. What shot does he have of getting in?	My lawyer has advised me not to comment so as not to impact my own HOF chances.	As good as getting a shot in the buttacks. He knows how that works.	Robert Downey Jr. (less than zero).	Haha, you said "shot." Irony considering he shot up the yolds for so many years.	The same shot Jay Cutler has at having the fewest turnovers in the league.
3	What was Joakim Noah thinking when the Cleveland Cavaliers made their trade this week?	"Anyone who calls this a 'block-buster' must be comparing it to an out-of-business video store. Zing!"	"People play basketball in Cleveland, they just don't vacation there."	"Cleveland still sucks."	Listen, he went to the University of Florida. Those guys have hard enough times thinking about themselves, much less others.	"Man I'm so upset Cleveland added to its big man depth with ... wait, who?! Hahahaha."
4	If Patrick Kane is done dressing up as Superman, who should take over?	The new Bears GM. After he/she earns it. In five years.	Not Corey Crawford. He can't leap steps at the House of Blues so how would he do so to tail buildings?	Speaking of Cleveland. Drew Carey? He's already got the glasses. Not sure he can skate though.	Whoever the Bears hire as their next coach because it's going to take super powers to turn that franchise around.	Not Jay Cutler, that's for sure. Unless it's Bizarro Superman.
5	Who is Guilherme do Prado?	He is everyone, he is no one, he is a mystery. Which is to say I don't know.	If he has a sixpack, maybe the next Calvin Klein spokesmodel; they seem to like soccer players.	He's the guy who is going to light Chicago's Fire.	IDK, but I can only hope he wins the lottery so I can say "Prado wins the lotto!"	Hopefully the Chicago Bears' new quarterback.

Jennings arrested for DUI, reckless driving in Georgia

Bears cornerback Tim Jennings was arrested and admitted into the Gwinnett County Detention Center in Georgia on Wednesday, charged with speeding, reckless driving and driving under the influence of alcohol. The three charges, according to Gwinnett County records, hold a bond total of $2,711. Jennings was released from jail at 3:41 p.m.

According to Cpl. Jake Smith, the Gwinnett County police public information officer, Jennings was stopped just before noon Wednesday traveling on Interstate 85 in Georgia. Jennings was observed by the arresting officer as driving 99 mph in a 65 mph zone.

LABEL LINGO

DECODING THE EVER-TRENDY JUICE BOTTLE

By Tony Peregrin | FOR REDEYE

Juice labels are intended to inform and protect the consumer, but that only works if you speak label-ese. If you're squeezing juice into your diet, keep an eye out for these key words before you buy.

TONY PEREGRIN IS A REDEYE SPECIAL CONTRIBUTOR. @TONYGRIN

LIGHT OR LESS SUGAR

Juice products with labels that boast "less sugar" or "light" should also raise an eyebrow. "There is no such thing as a sugar-free juice—all juices contain sugar in the form of naturally occurring fructose," said Kim Larson, a sports nutritionist and a national spokesperson for the Academy of Nutrition and Dietetics. "Light" or "reduced sugar" juice products fool the consumer into thinking they are consuming a healthier option, but in reality these products contain more water to cut the calories and less nutrition," Larson said.

While rich in vitamins and antioxidants, juices are also calorie-dense and a more concentrated source of sugar than whole fruits and vegetables. "Rather than looking for 'light' or 'lower-calorie' juices, buy 100 percent juice and have it in a smaller size—4 to 6 ounces per day," said Heather Mangieri, a sports nutritionist and spokesperson for the Academy of Nutrition and Dietetics.

100 PERCENT JUICE

"Start by looking for '100 percent juice' on the label—this means that everything in the bottle came directly from fruits or vegetables," Larson said. "If the label says '100 percent juice beverage' or '100 percent juice drink,' it could mean the product contains little or no juice, and almost guarantees there is added sugar."

NATURAL OR ORGANIC

Juice labels also often include descriptors such as natural or organic, and though they sound similar, they're not the same thing. "'Natural' is a non-regulated term that may be used as a marketing ploy to mislead consumers," Mangieri said. "Anything can be natural—sugar is natural. Organic products, which are regulated, must contain at least 95 percent organic ingredients [that] were grown with no pesticides or herbicides."

JUICY NEWS

Curious about cold-pressed juices? Read up on four juice bars that opened within the last year at redeyechicago.com/juicebars.

COLD-PRESSED

While the cold-pressed juice industry continues to expand onto grocery store and coffeehouse shelves, scientific studies supporting the benefits of this process—which is similar to pasteurization without the heat—have yet to surface in any conclusive way. "Since no high heat is used in cold-pressed juices, these juices retain more nutrients," Larson said. "There is also more fiber in these juices because there is more pulp. They do have a healthier appeal to consumers, but we don't have any studies to confirm there is more nutrient retention with this method of processing."

Mangieri stressed the importance of food safety for cold-pressed juice because they are not pasteurized and therefore have a much shorter shelf-life by nature. "Remember that, due to how they are prepared, cold-pressed juices can be slightly more associated with food-borne illnesses," she said. "Look at the expiration date, use them by that date and then throw them away."

NIGHTCRAWLERS

SEEN ON THE SCENE AT HOOK & LADDER, 2270 N. LINCOLN AVE.

The bar-packed strip of Lincoln Avenue in Lincoln Park just got a little boozier with the addition of Hook & Ladder, a next-door sibling to Halligan Bar. We stopped in found a cheery crowd of beer drinkers ready to rehash holiday gifts and New Year's resolutions. MIGUEL GUZMAN, FOR REDEYE

Michael Miller, 26, support team manager

What brought you here tonight?

It's a nice bar and you can't beat the prices!

What are you drinking and why?

I'm drinking Maker's Mark and Coke. It's just my favorite drink. I love it.

So, did you get anything especially cool or interesting over the holidays?

I did, I did—I got a wand from my girlfriend.

A wand? Like, as in magic wand?

Yeah, she got me a wand from Harry Potter in Orlando!

What have you done with it so far?

Oh, I've been doing a lot of magic, if you know what I mean.

Stephanie Ma, 29, hotel operations

What brought you here tonight?

I came to hang out with friends and it's a great place with great beer on tap.

What are you drinking and why?

Curious Traveler. It's a beer. Actually, it's a shandy with an apple and cinnamon flavor with a little bit of a buttery note to it.

So, what is your New Year's resolution year?

One is to be better with my finances, meaning shopping less. And the other is to be healthier.

Eric Alvarez, 27, sales

What brought you here tonight?

I just came out with my younger brother who's in town for the holidays.

What are you drinking and why?

Bulleit on the rocks, because it's delicious.

What was your favorite gift you gave someone?

Oh, my girlfriend's gift. I gave her some salsa dancing lessons for all of January. So, we're gonna be doing a lot of dancing. I'm excited!

HISTORY THAT SHINES

Troops guard Wentworth House, home of the Fitzwilliam family, during the coal riots of 1893.

Elise De Los Santos

Not all that glitters is gold. In the case of “Black Diamonds,” what glitters is coal. Originally published in the pre-“Downton Abbey” days of 2007, “Black Diamonds: The Downfall of an Aristocratic Dynasty and the Fifty Years that Changed England” capitalizes on the PBS drama’s popularity—and rightly so—with a new paperback edition out last month. Part of the story already will be familiar to the “Downton” viewer: early 1900s England, an aristocratic family (the Fitzwilliams), problems with heirs, lavish displays of wealth, illicit love affairs and a class clinging to its way of life by the tips of well-manicured fingers. But the true story of “Black Diamonds” fills in a missing part of the clean, countryside picturesque-ness portrayed on the show—which so far largely has ignored the industrial side of the north of England, where “Downton” supposedly takes place. Though the book definitely has its share of the jaw-dropping glitz that shines on TV, it also tells the story of how the lower classes’ fight for a chance at a better life eventually broke the aristocrats’ monopoly on wealth. Coal made fortunes for a few and misery for many. For thousands of workers, mining was a highly dangerous, often deadly job that barely kept them and their families from homelessness and starvation. For the Fitzwilliam family, it added material wealth—to the tune of 2.8 million pounds, or 3 billion pounds by today’s standards—to an inheritance that already included land, titles and Britain’s largest private residence, boasting 365 rooms and a facade twice the size of Buckingham Palace. Though the story always circles back to the Fitzwilliams, it takes necessary detours into the worlds of the coal miners, British Parliament and even the Kennedys—the closest thing to American royalty. Author Catherine Bailey weaves together these seemingly unrelated pieces of the past in a well-ordered, compelling narrative that’s difficult to put down. Whenever the text threatens to turn textbook, the story returns to its eye-opening and/or eyebrow-raising anecdotes. The best example is Bailey’s use of Kathleen “Kick”

Black Diamonds

Catherine Bailey

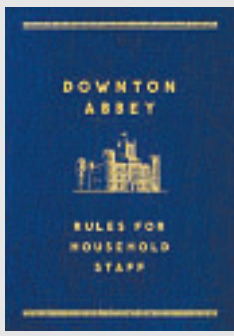

Kennedy: Though Kennedy’s life intersects with the Fitzwilliams’ only near the end, she is featured prominently adding color, personality and detail to what otherwise could have been a dry chapter on World War II and the differences between Americans and Brits. The book could have done with less-detailed political discussion. But what’s striking is how the political issues of 100 years ago continue to resonate today. The miners’ struggle for a “living wage” is a battle that’s stretched across the decades. Substitute “coal” for “health care,” and the book could be talking about 21st century America. “Black Diamonds” is a very human history that shows how both sides, miners and owners, were affected by a change that brought about the end of an era. It gives true life to an age that long has become the stuff of history books and historical fiction by combining the best of both worlds. ELISE DE LOS SANTOS IS A REDEYE COPY EDITOR WHO WOULD HAVE DONE HER HOMEWORK MORE OFTEN IF HER HISTORY PROFESSORS HAD ASSIGNED BOOKS LIKE THIS FOR CLASS.

Cleaning house

Downton Abbey: Rules for Household Staff

Need more “Downton Abbey” in your life? “Rules for Household Staff” delves into the duties of the downstairs staff at the estate. The servants’ handbook, published in November, never breaks character. It begins with an introduction penned by butler Carson, and continues with entries on attitude to appearance to cleaning methods. Lots and lots of cleaning. This faithfulness prevents “Rules” from becoming the treasure trove of trivia a “Downton” fan would eat up in a couple of hours. With the exception of Carson’s intro, the book fails to use the colorful characters who make downstairs life at Downton Abbey as interesting as it is upstairs. Similar in concept, the Harry Potter series’ “Fantastic Beasts and Where to Find Them” and “Quidditch Through the Ages” got around this dullness with a creative use of marginalia. That could have worked to great effect here. Just imagine Thomas’ snarky commentary.

Walkman this way?

Are you still nostalgic for your bright-yellow Walkman, that old friend who played cassette tapes? Too bad, because it doesn't look like Sony is selling the brand-new Walkman NW-ZX2 in that color. Announced at this week's Consumer Electronics Show in Las Vegas the luxury MP3 player reportedly will cost $1,199.99 and feature 128 GB of storage, pitchfork.com reports. TWELVE HUNDRED DOLLARS?!?! (Also, anyone remember the Zune?)

BUT WHAT'S HER FAVORITE FLAVOR?

We're not sure which we love more—Amy Poehler or pudding. So it's only fitting that Harvard's Hasty Pudding Theatricals has named her its Woman of the Year, which the university announced Tuesday. She'll be given a parade and a roast Jan. 29. Poehler seems to have not yet publicly commented, which is odd given that she usually has a smart-ass comment about pretty much everything.

THE DIGIT

27,000

That's how many New York City students will be offered free admission to "Selma," thr.com reports. The tickets comes via a partnership with Paramount Pictures and 27 African-American business leaders, and will be made available to seventh-, eighth- and ninth-graders through Jan. 19, Martin Luther King Jr. Day.

THE DIGIT

$1.6B

That's how much Americans spent downloading movies and TV shows in 2014, variety.com reports. Titles like "Frozen," "Guardians of the Galaxy," "The Lego Movie" and "The Hobbit: The Desolation of Smaug" topped the list, though that whole "Interview" thing made for a pretty nice year-end boost. The flick, which so far has earned $33 million despite not being shown in most U.S. theaters, will be released in U.K. theaters on Feb. 6, thr.com reports.

Marco? Hello!

Apparently it didn't take Netflix long to realize "Marco Polo" was a hit: The streaming series announced Wednesday the show, which premiered in December, has been renewed for a second season, thr.com reports. Also revealed Wednesday were premiere dates for new series "Marvel's Daredevil" (April 10), "Bloodline" (March 20), "The Unbreakable Kimmy Schmidt" (March 6) and "Grace and Frankie" (May 8). Will this hold us over until "Game of Thrones" comes back to HBO in April? UNLIKELY.

'My first day as a woman, and I'm already getting hot flashes!'

It's one thing to burn down a house, but it's quite another to try to burn down the house from "Mrs. Doubtfire." But that's exactly what some kook did earlier this week, Reuters reports. The San Francisco home, owned by a physician who may be feuding with a former patient, thankfully suffered only slight damage. Couldn't the guy just have tried a run-by fruiting instead?
